OUR MISSION

The mission of the Chicago Poetry Center is to connect people with poetry, equitably engage poets with communities, and foster creativity and literacy in schools.

OUR VISION

We envision a world where poetry catalyzes reflection, connection, and change.

OUR PROGRAMS

Core programs include: education, with a focus on underserved Chicago Public Schools; performance, with a focus on bringing poetry to neighborhoods citywide; and critical conversations through poetry, with a focus on anti-racism in the workplace.
2020-2021: The MAKE IT WORK Year

What to say about a year like this one? We made it work!

A full year of virtual classrooms, virtual performances, staff working remotely, changes in funding streams, changes in the world -- we could not have predicted this year, and we couldn't be prouder of the staff, board, and supporters who made CPC's resilience and success possible over the course of it.

This annual report is an opportunity to look back on what we accomplished, the ways we were able to sustain and even grow during this unpredictable time. We know that poetry's ability to catalyze reflection, connection, and change in the world is needed now more than ever, and we are committed to advancing that work for many years to come.

Thank you for being part of the Chicago Poetry Center!
2020-2021 BY THE NUMBERS

7,500  CPS students reached through virtual classroom residencies and pop-up performances

3,000  people attended CPC online events

38   Chicago poets and writers paid by CPC for teaching and performing

46%   increase in CPC's annual budget over the past three years

ZERO  CPC jobs or teaching artist contracts lost during the pandemic
Pandemic or no pandemic, students need poetry!

We are proud to have been one of the very first arts partners able to deliver programs to Chicago Public School students learning at home. Our offerings crossed the digital divide, offering access to programming both over home internet connections and through packets for students without reliable internet access.

School year 2020-2021 poetry residencies connected via livestream with young poets all over the city. Our teaching artists worked in 10 schools with 41 virtual classrooms, reaching a total of 7,500 students through residency work and pop-up performances.

This year, we also launched a new type of residency. In partnership with local health and wellness organization Aunt Martha’s, our teaching artists worked with court-involved youth through Evening Reporting Centers, offering the same level of engaging and exciting opportunities for self-expression, social-emotional skill development, and literacy learning as our regular in-school and afterschool poetry residencies.

Finding unique ways to support student engagement via at-home learning was a challenge, and the CPC team met it! Our dedicated team of teaching artists paired each of their live sessions with interactive workbooks, text, and recorded videos. These materials allowed us to support all learners with the opportunity to read, write, and listen to poems from their weekly lessons even outside of regular residency sessions.
Many teachers reported that their highest attendance during virtual classes last year was during poetry sessions. Students showed up for poetry because their Poets in Residence created sessions that mattered to them.

This fall, on the first day of programming in a classroom at Swift Elementary, Poet in Residence Leslie Reese asked her students to write wish poems. At the end of that first day, 2nd grader Sara sang her poem of wishes to the class.

CPC was thrilled to partner with Intrinsic Schools for a cross-campus community event in celebration of Black History Month. With support from the recording studio at GAP Community Center, CPC Poets performed original spoken word pieces alongside Intrinsic student poets. The event was filmed and presented as a virtual screening for the school’s students, faculty, and families.

CRITICAL CONVERSATIONS @ WORK: ANTI-RACISM

This year, we commissioned two poet-educators to design and pilot a curriculum that uses poetry to bring adults into critical conversations at work. Through the program, the written word provides a jumping-off point for conversations that uncover commonalities to generate connection and empathy, launching essential conversations about the many ways that race shapes our individual human experience and our interactions with each other.

Each session is led by two trained and racially diverse co-facilitators who guide participants through exploration of a theme related to racial justice through discussion of one or more contemporary poems, sharing of personal experiences, and guided writing practice. No prior poetry experience or education is needed, and sessions are conducted either virtually or in person.

Topics covered by the sessions include microaggressions, unspoken rules and biases, erasure, harm and healing, othering and belonging, and the necessity of hope for our shared survival.

As part of our commitment to equity in all of our operations, the poets whose work is utilized in these sessions receive a royalty payment each time their session occurs.

Sessions include a pre-session reading and concepts packet distributed to all participants, poems read live by facilitators or recording of authors reading their poems, time for guided individual reflection, peer sharing and group discussion, and follow-up resources for further reading and exploration.
CRITICAL CONVERSATIONS: WHAT PEOPLE ARE SAYING

“Great session! A small sampling of a lot that we need to talk about, done in an easier way because we’re discussing an art piece, not a heavy event.”

“Honestly a breath of fresh air. This truly was heart-centered work. I feel like I have gotten to know my close co-workers and the other members of the team who I don’t work as closely with so much better and more authentically just in those two hours. I so appreciate the space for vulnerability, creativity, curiosity, genuine emotions, and just humanness. Thank you.”

“Great prompts, built-in reflection time, moments of dialogue and facilitation. A renewing and rejuvenating way to open my week!”

“I was super happy that the facilitators were caring, responsive, and gentle with leading us through exercises that sometimes got deep and emotional. Also very happy that they opened the space to talking about poems, which is something that we don’t get to do often!”

“Thank you for these incredible poems and putting together this workshop. It has helped me so much to dive into my own identity and experiences and to feel vulnerable and connected to others in my organization.”
CPC Reading Series

As we made our way through the pandemic and waited for opportunities to gather safely in person again, we translated the CPC Reading Series into digital form for delivery via social media and the electronic newsletter. Every month, we highlighted the work of one of our fantastic Chicago poetry community members, sharing a poem and a bit of their personal history and perspective.

Chicago Poets Then & Now: Perspectives on Social Justice

To celebrate National Poetry Month, CPC partnered with the Chicago History Museum to showcase exceptional Chicago poets and celebrate Chicago’s rich poetic past with a free virtual performance the evening of April 29. The event, which featured Helene Achanzar, Maya Marshall, H. Melt, José Olivarez, and avery r. young, drew audience members from across the city and the country as well as a few international viewers.

Poetry Out Loud

For the fourth consecutive year, CPC hosted the annual Poetry Out Loud competition. Teens from Chicago-area city and suburban schools competed in the Chicagoland regionals for a spot at the statewide Poetry Out Loud poetry recitation competition and a chance to advance to the national competition in Washington DC to win $20,000.

Despite the many challenges created by the pivot to a remote national contest, students were able to submit videos of their recitations to be judged by our panel, and judges conducted their work remotely. The first and second places from each region (city and suburbs) then progressed to the Illinois state competition level. Catherine Herrera (Taft High School, Chicago), became the 2021 Illinois State champion in the Poetry Out Loud: National Recitation Contest. We are especially proud that Catherine is also a CPC Poets in Residence program participant!
The Chicago Poetry Center is dedicated to diversity, equity, and inclusion in all of our operations, and to becoming ever more intentionally and overtly anti-racist as an organization. We are engaged in a constant process of analysis and growth in all of these areas, and a few of our efforts are described below.

At the board of directors level, we added two positions to the board that are filled by CPC teaching artists; these are two-year positions for which the teaching artists receive a monthly stipend.

In pursuit of ever greater transparency in our operations, we have also opened all board and committee meetings to any member of the staff, including interns and teaching artists, interested in attending. The board has also established a standing anti-racism subcommittee focused on exploring structural options for the board to promote ever greater equity in its functioning, and facilitating the continuous growth of board members in leveraging their privileges toward the advancement of equity.

Within our programs, we launched the Critical Conversations @ Work: Anti-Racism program and committed to compensating the poets of color whose work we feature in the program with royalties each time their poem is used.

At the staff level, we initiated a series of paid internships to replace key unpaid volunteer roles. We also conducted a review of teaching artist compensation across Chicagoland literacy organizations and raised our teaching artist pay by 20 to 25% across the board as well as increasing the amount of paid preparation time.
This year, we launched a program where a person or group of people can sponsor a classroom for a full-year poetry residency! Huge thanks to everyone who supported us in bringing poetry into schools citywide.

GROWING

I used to be a word
But now I am a book
I used to be an empty water bottle
But now I am full
I used to be blank
But now I am colored
I used to be a reader
But now I am a writer
I used to be a listener
But now I am a speaker
I used to be a member
But now I am the leader
